What has happened to the free enterprise system in America? It sounds to me like there are a lot of sore losers out there who are trying to jump on the bandwagon and to get something for nothing.

If it weren't for Microsoft, where would we be today in our ability to do the many functions which the computer is capable of doing? There are other operating systems available if someone chooses not to use Windows. Having Windows as the standard does make sense and it simplifies trying to use other computers, in that a person does not have to retrain in learning a new system when changing jobs.

My hat goes off to Microsoft and I would think that our government and all the blood sucking lawyers that keep agitating the lawsuit should find something else to occupy their time. The economy is already in enough of a tailspin without having to put up with the uncertainty which this type of trial is imposing on the citizens of this great country.
